Author, Filmmaker,

Founder of Safeguard The Seas

William McKeever is an author and documentary filmmaker. His book, Emperors of the Deep, is in bookstores and focuses on raising awareness to the plight of sharks and educating the reader on recent scientific discoveries about the importance of them to the marine ecosystem. The book also makes a call for regulatory action to save them. He also is the producer/writer/director of a shark documentary film of the same name. The film exposes the threats that sharks face around the world and explains why society needs to change how it views these animals. Through interviews with scientists around the world and exciting shark video footage, the viewer sees sharks in a new light.

Irene Crowe, PhD

Founder of the Pettus Crowe Foundation

The founder of the Pettus Crowe Foundation, Dr. Irene Crowe, seeks out hidden gems of projects all over the world that can, with directed support make a significant difference in the protection of animals. A woman of enormous commitment, love and compassion, she studied at Oxford, was (and is) a peace advocate, devoted enormous energy to dealing with the human tragedy of HIV and toward promoting biomedical ethics. The animal protection community is blessed that with her last decision on her life's direction, she recognized and decided to pursue her inner passion—the love of animals and wild places—and devote her foundation to making the world better for animals. This has led her to Baja (Gray Whales), Kenya (Giraffes, Rhinos and Elephants), Antigua and Bonaire (Donkeys), and Delaware's Inland Bay (brackish water) terrapins, among other places and animals. And all of this Irene and her foundation accomplish while avoiding public recognition, by selecting important but unheralded projects, and quietly providing critical support when needed.
